Qualified Adoption Expenses

“Qualified adoption expenses” as defined by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) are reasonable and necessary expenses directly related to, and for the principal purpose of, the legal adoption of an eligible child, including:

- Adoption fees
- Attorney fees
- Court costs
- Travel expenses (including meals and lodging) while away from home

In addition to federally allowed adoption expenses, qualified expenses eligible for reimbursement through the Cornell University adoption assistance program include:
- Public and private adoption agency fees permitted or required under the state law with jurisdiction over the adoption
- Fees for medical and hospital services provided to the child (not otherwise covered by insurance)
- Immigration filing fees, required and recommended immunizations, and dossier translation fees
- Foster care charges incurred by the adoptive family while finalizing the adoption process, provided the adoption results in the placement of the eligible child in the adoptive employee’s home.
- Adoptive parents may incur expenses for a potential adoption in which birth parents are unwilling to proceed with the adoption. Some individuals may have had more than one adoption arrangement with a birth parent fall through. Adoptive parents are advised to carefully select a licensed agency to arrange their adoptions. Dissolved and disrupted adoptions are included in the adoption benefit reimbursement cap.

Non-Qualified Expenses

Adoption expenses reimbursed through resources external to Cornell University will not qualify for reimbursement through the Adoption Assistance Program. In addition, expenses claimed for the purposes of benefiting from the adoption tax credit also will not be considered for reimbursement.

According to the IRS, qualified adoption expenses do not include expenses:

- That violate state or federal law
- For carrying out any surrogate parenting arrangement
- For the adoption of your spouse’s or partner’s child
- Paid using funds received from any federal, state, or local program
- Allowed as a credit or deduction under any other federal income tax rule
- Tax Treatment of Reimbursement
- The Adoption Assistance Program is a formal benefit plan sponsored by the university, which allows you to avoid some of the impact of taxation on the benefit amount. Reimbursed amounts will not be subject to income tax however, will be subject to social security deductions.

In attempt to simplify the taxation process for Cornell employees, the university is implementing the same rules that meet federal tax guidelines, enabling adoptive parents to arrange their documentation to qualify their expenses for both benefits. As tax rules change, so will the profile of the Adoption Assistance Program, from a tax planning point of view. Visit the IRS http://www.irs.gov for additional information.

Adding Your Child to Existing Benefits

At the time of placement, you may add your child to your medical, dental, group life and personal accident plans and also establish a 529 New York College Savings Plan. In addition, you may enroll in a flexible spending account. Adding or enrolling the child in these plans may involve deadlines. You will also need to complete an enrollment form and provide a copy of the adoption agreement in order to enroll.
